Due Diligence Reviews
By Krysta Countryman, State Contract Analyst

When we were in grade school learning to write, most of us could agree that a teacher (or two) would drill us to “cross our T’s and dot our I’s”. This type of review should still hold true when it comes to making an award. When a vendor has been selected for an award, the Utah Code and Administrative Rule allows Procurement Officials to perform a review on the vendor to determine if the vendor is reliable and capable of performing the work or service for which they are being awarded. This type of review is typically called a due diligence review and may be completed before an official award is given.

So, what exactly is a due diligence review? What information will it provide and how can it be put into practice?

A due diligence review is an investigation, audit, or review performed to confirm the facts of a matter under consideration. In plain text, it means doing your homework. Due diligence reviews may provide information that an agency may not already be aware of that may impact the responsiveness or reliability of a vendor. This may include legal actions, turn-over in major personnel, loss of a major contract, any alleged violations of federal, state, or local regulations, etc. In a perfect world, these complications should not arise after completing a flawless procurement process; however, sometimes these issues still find a way to occur, and that’s just a fact of life in the world of procurement.

Ultimately, the “how” should be determined by the Procurement Official of the Procurement Unit. Due diligence reviews can be as simple as doing a quick 10-minute internet search on the vendor, its top executive individuals, contract points of contact, and the contract signees. Due diligence reviews can also be as in-depth to include an analysis of the vendor’s business practices. The reviews can also help ensure that the vendor does not have any financial ties to individuals or entities on an OFAC (Office of Foreign Assets Control) sanctions list.

The good news? The majority of the time, significant issues or concerns won’t be found and the Procurement Official can continue to make the award. However, you may never know when the day will come when you say to yourself, “I’m glad I did my homework.” For questions, contact Krysta Countryman, kcountryman@utah.gov

State Cooperative Contracts: Order Instructions

By Laurel DeLagerheim, State Contract Analyst

Each of our State Cooperative Contracts comes with its own unique set of ordering instructions. It is important to follow these when making purchases using these contracts.

For example, there may be instructions to make a best value determination based on your specific needs and you can choose a particular contractor that can meet your Scope of Work in the time specified. Of course, encouraging competition and obtaining multiple quotes is always preferred! Sometimes a secondary process is required (think Approved Vendor List) and executive branch agencies will need to contact State Purchasing to assist you. Other cooperative contracts may be as straightforward as choosing from the price list or catalog associated with that particular contract.

Additionally, if the cooperative contract number starts with AR, you will need the applicable authorization before placing your order. Our most common AR contracts require executive branch entities to get approval from either Finance or Technology Services.

As always, if you have any questions regarding Order Instructions or any other details regarding any of our Statewide Cooperative Contracts, please do not hesitate to contact us!

Public Records

By Chike Ogbuehi, Contract Analyst

In enacting the Utah Government Records Access and Management Act (GRAMA), the State legislatures recognized the public’s right to easy and reasonable access to public records, and individual rights of privacy to personal data. In relation to State procurements, there exists a relationship of trust between the State of Utah Division of Purchasing (the “Division”) and State agencies expressly identified in the Utah Procurement Code. That relationship of trust puts certain duties on the Division concerning documentation of solicitations managed by the Division on behalf of the State Agencies and other public entities in certain instances.

First, concerning the public’s access to records of agency solicitations and contracts, both the Division of Purchasing and the agency are record holders of those documents. However, the Division processes and responds to all requests for records pertaining to the solicitations it conducts and the resulting contracts in this instance. On this note, an agency can request records of solicitations from the Division for their own records.

Second, as to courtesy posting and documents relating to solicitations for entities with independent procurement authority, such entities must retain their records. Thus, in the event of a public record request to the Division in relation to a courtesy posting, the request will be referred to the entity of record. This is in line with the provision of 63G-2-204(2)(a) that requires a person making a request for record to submit the request to the government entity that prepares, owns, or retains the record. Governmental entities working with the Division should ensure they retain all information, records, and documents on any solicitation posted through the Division.

Third, the Division maintains all documents relating to statewide solicitations and contracts irrespective of the benefactors of the contract. The Division will respond to all public record requests for documents about statewide contracts. In addition, all resulting statewide contracts are publicly posted on the Division website.

Lastly, a question to examine is how long does the Division maintain these records? The simple answer is that the Division keeps all records in accordance with the State’s Retention Schedule. If you have any questions in relation to the Retention Schedule, please contact the Division of Archives and Records Services.

If you have questions regard the Division of Purchasing standards of operation in processing and responding to public record requests, please contact me at cogbuehi@utah.gov.
Cat Turner joined the State of Utah Division of Purchasing in June 2018 and cannot believe how fast the time has past. One of the things that she enjoys about purchasing is that every solicitation is different and is a new learning opportunity. In the past two years, she has learned a lot about the different services and functions that her assigned agencies provide. She recently has taken over the lead state position for the NASPO Office Furniture portfolio and joined the GRAMA team.

Cat is looking forward to travelling long distance and going to concerts again! She is also crossing her fingers that the ski resorts will be open soon! In the meantime, she is enjoying going on day trips with her husband and two dogs to various spots around the state on the weekends and holidays including a drive to Stansbury Island and an old railroad tunnel in the desert through which you can drive your vehicle (please see photos).
